One evening an innkeeper was making butter cookies. She wanted to make them all chocolate. She cut a bar of chocolate into tiny pieces and added them to the cookie dough. She thought that the chocolate would melt completely and she would have chocolate cookies. But when she took the cookies out of the oven, the chocolate hadn't melted at all. The chocolate chips had kept their form instead. Unexpectedly her guests loved the cookie. They told other people about the taste of the new cookies, and people began to come just to eat cookies.

People who are against nuclear energy have a misunderstanding of what options are available for the future electricity supply. They say solar and wind energy can be a reliable source of electricity in the future. But the sun doesn't shine at night or on cloudy days, and the wind generators are useless when the wind doesn't blow. Accordingly, the best sources of electricity for our near future are nuclear energy. It is certain that there will be no better alternative to nuclear energy for the time being.

Once upon a time there was a famous Buddhist priest called Muhakdaesa. He had the reputation of wisdom. One day a public official wondered about Muhakdaesa's reputation, so he wanted to test him and said jokingly, "I don't know whether you are wise or not. You just look like a wild pig." "You look like a Buddha," replied Muhakdaesa. "Why do you say so?" asked he. "A wild pig thinks everyone looks like a wild pig, while the Buddha thinks everyone looks like a Buddha." He felt so shameful and realized that the reputation was true.
